RE-ESTABLISH CHARTER SCHOOLS CAP

- Removing California's charter school cap was a mistake. California's original 1992 charter school law included a cap of 100 charter schools statewide and no more than 10 charter schools per school district. Since the cap was removed in 1998, the number of charter schools operating in California has skyrocketed to more than 1,300 with very little accountability and transparency measures in place.
- Our focus must be on improving public education for all students, not on expansion of corporate charter school chains. California currently has nearly twice as many charter schools as any other state in the nation. Laws governing oversight have not kept pace with the unregulated growth of the charter industry.
- Networks of California's charter schools are prioritizing growth opportunities over educational opportunities for all students. Neighborhood public school students are bearing the cost for the unchecked expansion of privately-managed charter schools.
